U.S. Introduces $29-Billion Plan To Aid Third World

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches SEOUL - The United States introduced Tuesday a $29-billion plan to help poor countries cope with their crippling debt burdens. The plan, which relies heavily on increased loans by private banks and urges developing countries to adopt market-oriented economic policies, was outlined by Treasury Secretary James A. Baker 3d in a speech before the annual World Bank and International Monetary Fund conference that opened Tues-

The meeting also featured a surprise announcement by the World Bank's president, A.W. Clausen, that he would step down when his five-year term ends next June:

Mr. Baker's plan calls for commercial banks to increase their lending to poor nations by $20 billion, or about 2.5 percent over present loans, over the next three years. Governments' development banks would increase their lending by roughly 50 percent, or $9 billion, in the same period.

Mr. Baker also sought pledges for $20 billion in fresh lending from commercial banks to about 15 middle-income countries over three

The meeting, attended by several thousand delegates from the World Bank-IMF's 149 member nations, was held amid very tight security, particularly when President Chun Doo Hwan of South Korea arrived to deliver opening remarks.

U.S Republicans Unveil Trade Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Republicans introduced a 23-point trade bill on Tuesday that is intended to increase access to foreign markets for U.S. goods.

The measure would increase the power of the U.S. trade representative. Under its provisions, the representative could act on his own to impose retaliatory tariffs and quotas on imported goods.

The bill would also allow the president to negotiate through the trade representative for one year to sell Alaskan North Slope oil and natural gas to Japan, but such an agreement could be concluded "only in return for substantial concessions by Japan regarding imports." The sale of North Slope oil to Japan is presently banned by law.

Soares Still Plans to Run for Presiden®

LISBON (Reuters) - The outgoing Portuguese prime minister, Mário Soares, said Tuesday he would still run for the presidency in January despite his Socialist Party's defeat in Sunday's general election by its former coalition partner, the Social Democratic Party.

Mr. Soares, speaking after meeting President Antônio Ramalho Prime Minister Laurent Fabius ing President Antônio Ramalho said last week that he had told Mr. Eanes, said he would stay on as caretaker prime minister until Mr. Eanes named a new head of gov-ernment. "I maintain my candidacy [for the presidency] and I will exercise my duties as prime minis-ter until the end," he said.

He added that a request he had made to Mr. Eanes on Monday cials to Mrs. Yankelevich were the night to be relieved of his duties as prime minister was an attempt to smooth the transfer of power to the Social Democrats. The Social Democratic leader, Anibal Cavaco Silva, was due to meet Mr. Eanes later Tuesday to discuss the forma-

Beijing Leaders Assail Revival of Prostitution

BEIJING - More than 30 years after the Communist Party claimed to have eradicated prostitution in China, the revival of the practice is causing official high-level concern. For more than a year, foreign visitors have noticed that young Chinese women work as prostitutes in and around the big-city hotels, particularly in the southern city of Guangzhou. But it is only recently that the practice has been publicly condemned by party leaders.

The issue has strong political connotations. The tens of thousands who worked as prostitutes in China before 1949 were regarded by the Communists as a symptom of the country's degradation, and their elimination was hailed as a ciety ordained by Mao. Some party leaders have seized upon the prostitutes' return as a

In the late summer of 1964, a few months before the United States began the sustained bombing of North Vietnam, se-nior officials of the State and Defense Departments, Joint Chiefs of Staff, Central Intelligence Agency and Information Agency ran a secret war game to project what would happen if the United States escalated the light-

Robert H. Johnson, a former State Department official who headed a task force sifting the policy options before the United States moved irrevocably into the war, said in an article in the fall issue of Foreign Policy magazine that President Lyndon B. Johnson and his chief advisers ignored the war game findings. The writer said American policymakers "were not prepared to accept a negotiated solution that, it was widely recognized, would very likely lead to an early Communist takeover.

The war game study was conducted on orders from Walt W. Rostow, then chief of the State Department's policy planning council, who became President Johnson's national security adviser and a leading supporter of wider U.S. involvement in the war.

Midwest U.S. Cities Revive Waterfronts

By John Holusha

New York Times Service CLEVELAND - For a hundred years the people who ran this city seemed bent on increasing the distance between themselves and Lake Erie. Slag from steel mills was dumped into the lake, creating a dreary plain stretching from the downtown heights.

Now the city government and some influential private groups are working to reverse the process.

Next year, if current plans are followed, seven and a half acres (3.1 hectares) of land will be gouged out to create an inner har-

Cleveland is just one of a number of Middle Western cities looking to the waterfront to improve the quality of life and attract people and businesses back downtown.

According to a survey by the Center for the Great Lakes, a nonprofit group that monitors com-mercial and environmental activities, 38 of 50 communities along the shoreline have waterfront projects under construction or in advanced planning stage. This does not include such places as Flint, Michigan, and Indianapolis, which are developing the rivers that flow through them.

Like projects in Baltimore and Boston, many in the Middle West are intended to recapture unused industrial property for public use and private development. Aban-doned factories and warehouses, built when rivers and lakes were prime sources of transportation, are being pulled down or converted for residential and commercial use.

In Cleveland, where the Cuyayoung people are turning aban-doned warehouses into apartments.

Federal dollars remain a key ingredient in most of the waterfront projects; for example, 54 percent of the $103 million earmarked for the first phase of the North Coast project in Cleveland.

However, much of the impetus for some of the more notable waterfront transformations has come from business and industry. Ten years ago the section of Toledo along the Maumee River, which empties into Lake Erie, was a wasteland of weed-filled parking lots and abandoned factories.

Then the Owens-Illinois Corp. and the Toledo Trust Co. agreed to build new headquarters along the river, and these buildings became the core of a complex that now includes a hotel, a park and the Portside Festival Marketplace, a collection of shops and restaurants.

Milwaukee, like Cleveland, has both a lakefront and a riverfront. "Milwaukeeans are passionate about their lakefront," said Wil-

Marie Control of the By Esther B. Fein New York Times Service UNITED NATIONS, New York — The foreign minister of Zimbabwe has informed the General Assembly that his country was prepared to accept the consequences that economic sanctions against South Africa would have on Zimbabwe.

Zimbabwe relies heavily on South Africa's roads and railroads to export goods. But the foreign minister, Witness Mangwende, said Monday that his country did not "want the international community to shirk its responsibility to the people of South Africa by hid-ing behind our vulnerability to South Africa's reprisals if mandatory sanctions are imposed against Critics have argued that economic sanctions to press South Africa to change apartheid would harm the black majority there and in surrounding countries.

Last month, however, the leaders of six countries near South Africa - Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe - issued a statement supporting economic pressure as a tool to end apartheid.

Mr. Mangwende said Zimbabwe accepted "that there is a price to pay for the liberty of our brothers and sisters in South Africa and Namibia," and that it was "prepared to play our full role." But he added that if any action were taken, including the imposition of mandatory sanctions, his country would expect "the international community to shoulder its responsibility to the region for the consequences."

The IMF, which arranges shortterm loans for countries in financial difficulties, has been criticized by some low-income countries because it obliges that governments get deficits and high interest rates, adopt austerity programs to get credit. The World Bank deals in longer-term development projects.

The United States wants the talked-about topic at the meeting, World Bank to play a larger role in meeting the debt crisis. Mr. Baker said the bank "is better equipped to look at the free market, market-

After a Battle of Statistics, Belgians Vote Sunday to Decide: 'Am I Better Off Now?'

By Steven J. Dryden International Herald Tribune

BRUSSELS: - As Belgium goes into its national elections Sunday, un employment is close to 14 percent, wages are lagging behir, id inflation and taxes are going up. Borrowing a sl ogan from an unlikely source, Ronald Reagan, the poster's of the opposition Socialist Party ask. "Are you better of f than you were four years ago?"

To which the billboards of Prime Minister Wilfried Martens reply: "No change in policies."

Mr. Martens is auguing for no change because his statistics show that, compared to four years ago. Belgium is on the path to economic recovery, despite the problems with unemployment wages and taxes.

Most importantly, Mr. Martens says, the austerity measures imposed early in his latest four-year administration have restored the competitiveness of Belgian businesses, a necessity in an economy that is oriented to exports.

Before forming the present coalition government in December 1981, Mr. Martens had been been prime minis-ter in four governments in the preceding three years.

Bombs Hit Brussels, Paris Targets

United Press International BRUSSELS --- Bombs exploded early Tuesday in Brussels and Paris, slightly injuring one person in Paris but causing no injuries in Brussels, police said. In Brussels, a car bomb went off in front of the headquarters of the gas and electricity company Sibelgaz, shattering the building's win-

Leaflets left at the scene said the attack had been conducted by the Fighting Communist Cells, a group that has staged a number of bombings in Belgium against industrial and political offices as well as North Atlantic Treaty Organization installations.

In Paris, a bomb exploded outside the Casino de Paris, a theater. A passerby was hit by flying glass but did not require hospital treat-

No one claimed responsibility for the Paris attack.

Police in Brussels said two guards saw a small van enter the party. So it was pretty smart of Mr. Sibelgaz premises early Tuesday. A man jumped out and started throwing leaflets around.

He shouted at the guards: "Run. it is going to explode," and fled,

The leaflets said the attack marked the first anniversary of Fighting Communist Cells' activity in Belgium. The group's first bombing took place last October.

Last May, two firemen were killed in the explosion of a car bomb left by the group at the head-quarters of the Belgian Employers Federation, and in April, bombs damaged the offices of the NATO Assembly and of a West German electronics group. The Fighting Communist Cells claimed responsibility for both attacks.

Babangida Says He Will Respect People's Wishes on Loan

By Edward A. Gargan New York Times Service

LAGOS - The military leader of Nigeria has declared that he will the minister of finance, Kalu L not accept a $2.4-billion loan from the Nigerian people opposed it.

Major General Ibrahim Baban-gida said Monday that Nigerians must expect "a lot of bad times, a lot of sacrifices" during the 15month economic emergency he announced last week. Even more, he said, the country must brace for a. sharp drop in the price of oil - virtually the only Nigerian export. General Babangida predicted, however, that Nigeria would be self-sufficient in food within 12 months, a condition that has not prevailed here since the oil boom of he mid-1970s.

The 44-year-old general made his comments in an interview with three Western journalists at his headquarters at Dodan Barrack in central Lagos.

General Babangida said that he had told U.S. officials that he wished to improve relations with the United States, which he acknowledged have been strained in

"We did indicate officially that we did want to get closer," he said. In addition, he said that the United States could play "an important role" in pressing Nigeria's creditors to be more flexible in

Although he set no timetable for was intent on returning the military to the barracks. "We will announce a program that will lead to active participation in government by the civil population," he said.

He emphasized that his military government remained accountable to the people of Nigeria, particularly on the issue of the much-debated IMF loan agreement.

Whatever decision we take, whether for or against, I maintain that it is going to be a decision based on what the Nigerian populace wants," he said.

Shortly after seizing power on Aug. 27, the general said he would break the deadlock in the stalled, two-year-old negotiations with the IMF over terms for a multibillion-Britain has given formal notice dollar loan. #### Hurting the World Court

bles appearance to the Reagan administration's decision to terminate the United States' 39-year-old declaration accepting the compul-sory jurisdiction of the World Court. It looks as though the United States merely decided it was taking too much heat in Nicaragua's current suit alleging that American support of the "contras" violates international law. Not many Americans may know exactly what international law is, but it is something of an article of national faith that American conduct in the world should be in conformity with it. The spectacle of the United States walking off the field is not a pleasant one.

In fact, the reality differs from the appearance. American acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in political cases (on a reciprocal basis) represented the part of the American postwar outlook holding that the terrible conflagration of World War II could usher in a rule of law. Few countries - no unfriendly ones - ever followed the American example. At that, the United States ruled its domestic affairs out of the court's jurisdiction and made plain that it world, has a greater interest than any other in would not allow it to compromise American seeing it strengthened, not diminished. security. So it jarred many American lawyers,

There is a disconcerting pick-up-your-mar-les appearance to the Reagan administra-dent Reagan's foreign policy, when the court, in the Nicaragua case, asserted jurisdiction for the first time in a continuing armed conflict.

But that does not fully explain the administration's reaction. Insisting that the court is essentially a political forum, and an unfriendly one, the United States declined to stand up to Nicaragua's charges and to avail itself of the opportunity to present the American counterclaim that the Sandinists are subverting their neighbors. The United States could have considered withdrawing partially from the court's compulsory jurisdiction, making the national security reservation that other states have made. Instead it withdrew entirely.

A strong argument can be made that the World Court made a mistake by taking the Nicaragua case; the dispute between Managua and Washington is political and should have gone to a political forum — the United Nations. At this late date, too, few people mistake the court for mankind's last best hope. But it is an institution with its modest uses, and America, as the pre-eminent country of law in the - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Punishing AIDS Carriers

Diane McGrath, the Republican candidate for mayor of New York, has a plan for controlling the spread of AIDS. She would require all doctors, nurses, teachers, food handlers and prostitutes to take the blood test that detects the antibody to the AIDS virus, and would bar those whose tests are positive from contact with the public. Their loss of livelihood would be regrettable, Mrs. McGrath says, but people exposed to AIDS are "a clear and evident menace to the health of their patrons.

Fear and ignorance about AIDS can so weaken people's senses as to make them susceptible to an equally virulent threat: bigotry. Unlike the AIDS virus, bigotry is contagious. Unlike AIDS, bigotry can be treated. More than AIDS, bigotry is a threat to the innocent public. There is every reason to try to contain bigotry, but there is none for locking up those who carry the AIDS virus.

Mrs. McGrath is not the only victim of ignorance about AIDS. Judge Harold Hyman, who is hearing a suit against the city's policy of permitting some children with AIDS to attend school, says he cannot imagine why the city Health Department does not quarantine adults with advanced AIDS. How should those afflicted with ignorance be treated? With the compassion and understanding that they would deny to the victim of AIDS. They must be reassured that their fears are uninformed and their proposals ill-conceived.

AIDS is frightening, but it is also extremely hard to contract. The principal routes of infection are anal intercourse and contaminated hypodermic needles. With the possible exception of prostitutes, none of the professions Mrs. McGrath would victimize are spreading might be at risk of contracting it. But she might think about that for a moment. Doctors and nurses have courageously cared for AIDS victims for years now without harm. They thus provide persuasive evidence that the disease cannot be spread by casual contact.

About a million Americans carry an antibody to the AIDS virus in their blood without having developed AIDS. Many of them may also carry the virus that is the antibody's target. In theory, the antibody test offers a handle by which to control the spread of AIDS, since almost everyone with the virus also has antibodies to it. Shouldn't everyone be made to take the test? Shouldn't the names of those whose tests are positive be reported to a registry, as Colorado now requires?

No. Forcing people to take a test, or recording names in a registry, would expose those at risk to discrimination at work and at home for trivial gain. No treatment can yet be offered to carriers of the virus. Nor is there any reason to quarantine them. They are not contagious and the "quarantine" might ruin their lives, for no public benefit. All that could at present be offered to those forcibly identified is education: advice on how not to infect a sexual partner. But most of the million at risk are homosexuals, and most already receive that advice, which is the same for people who have the antibody and for those who do not. When a treatment for AIDS is developed, there may be more point in seeking out those who could benefit from it. New signs of AIDS among prostitutes, presumably due to abuse of drugs, strengthens the case for trying to close that avenue of infection. Meantime, proposals to seek out and segregate persons exposed to AIDS promise only to institute a new apart-- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

An American Switch in Seoul

The United States' forward-looking package of proposals currently being presented at the IMF-World Bank general meeting in Seoul is a surprising but much-welcomed gesture. For the Reagan administration to be interested in multilateralism again after several years of preaching bilateralism and other conservative dogma is a sharp reversal of stance.

The U.S. move is not without self-interest. The U.S. economy has slowed, imports are continuing unabated. The United States may not have heeded the world's complaints a few year ago, except to present itself as a model while decrying Third World mismanagement and the European Community's rigid state structures, but this is changing.

— The Business Times (Kuala Lumpur).

After More Rioting in Britain

This is irredeemably bleak. Within a handful of weeks, Brixton follows Handsworth and Tottenham follows Brixton. Worse, there is a feeling of momentum, of gathering violence. Now, at Tottenham, the rioters have guns and knives as well as petrol bombs. The metropolitan commissioner talks of plastic bullets, tear gas and water cannons, while the home secretary holds hard to his seemingly unshakable conviction that these are gangs of criminals, to be cowed and caught and locked away. [There is] no attempt to give a fabric of society to neighborhoods where isolation and poverty dominate, areas of foredoomed losers in the political game of winners and losers. Neil Kinnock had a good phrase for it all, last week: government by "lethargy and conflict." That rings, day by day, more horribly true.

It is, in the final resort, the blacks of Britain who must decide their own destiny here. Either they obey the laws of this land where they have taken up residence, or they must expect the fascist street agitators to call ever more boldly and with ever louder approval for them to "go back from whence they came." They must do more to discipline their young. They must find themselves community leaders who preach cooperation - not confrontation. - The Daily Mail (London).

Skepticism About 'Star Wars'

Whenever the concept of a space-based antimissile system is taken out of the hands of its proponents and is objectively examined by nonpartisan scientific and technical experts. the answer is the same: It will be very expensive; it could be militarily and politically destabilizing; in all likelihood, it will not work. The Pentagon sidesteps [criticism] by saying that the United States would not deploy a "star wars" system unless it was effective and contributed to military stability. But, given the 40-year history of the nuclear arms race, the Pentagon's statement is scarcely reassuring.

1910: Turks Battle Druses in Syria CONSTANTINOPLE — The special correspondent of the "Tanin" with the Hauran Expedition in Syria telegraphs details of the operations against the Druses. Both columns began the advance, and the Northern column burned two villages, and after stubborn fighting occupied the fortified height of Mefaleh. the Druse rallying point. Fighting continued all day and all night. The losses of the Druses exceeded 500. The resistance encountered by the Southern column was also of a stubborn nature. Fighting lasted about thirty hours. Some villages were burned and the Druses lost 300 men. The enemy's only stronghold consists of the fortress of Sheba, against which the Turkish force will march in a few days' time.

1935: U.S. Defense Spending Rises

WASHINGTON - The armed forces of the United States are being strengthened to main-tain defenses through the expenditure of $2,000,000 a day — the highest figure since the World War. Congress provided for increased Army and Navy personnel as well as new armaments to make the armed forces among the most efficient in the world, the budget providing for approximately a 50 percent increase in expenses this year. The Army and Navy will draw on the Treasury for the $700,000,000 provided by the budget. Last year expenditures were less than $500,000,000. Expenditure resulting from previous wars and preparedness in 1936 will total $1,890,000,000, or about 45 percent of the Federal income.

United Nations: Reforms Might Help It to Work

TEW YORK -For all the champagne and fine words, it should be obvious to friends and foes alike that the United Nations is in trouble and has fallen far short of what its founders dreamed of 40 years ago.

One of the main complaints is that as a multilateral organization the United Nations hinders proper bilateral international relations. But the world is now more interdependent now parceled out more widely than it used to be. That requires talking to ry and time are on their side. What the United Nations suffers from is than ever. Also, like it or not, power is The United Nations is the mechanism for doing that.

They thus share an interest in turning the United Nations into an effective. workmanlike forum.

There are a number of ways this can be done without interfering with the essential constitutional character of the United Nations — the power of veto in the Security Council and the one-state, one-vote principle of the General Assembly.

Such a change would not challenge the interests of the major powers, who would gain more than anybody from a more coherently function and balanced world body. And the small states should have no complaint. The United Nations is often their principal diplomatic outlet; indeed, they worry that it is only they who invest a relatively large part of their diplomatic effort there.

Some think the organization is in decline because the secretary-general has so few powers. Not necessarily. What has happened is that the agen-da of the United Nations has become an unwieldy millstone around his neck. The secretary-general and his staff should be allowed to concentrate on, say, half a dozen crucial issues. At the moment, the United Nations is an octoons walking in every direction at once.

Nor need an action always wait until the last moment. A useful intervention as soon as the early warnings sound can do much more good than a later Band-Aid. # A Season of Uncertainty: By Flore

PARIS - There is a peculiar rhythm to the troubles of France's Socialist government, like a square dance of a step or two forward. and several steps back.

For a few days last week the Soviet, leader, Mikhail Gorbachev, captured all the headlines and gave President. François Mitterrand a chance to ap, pear as the firmly decisive national leader, an image that the Greenpeace affair had put in question.

Mr. Mitterrand's flat rejection of the Soviet request for negotiations on the French atomic force was in line with his stern order not to let Greenpeace protesters interfere with miclear tests in the South Pacific. The answer to the Russians won general applause in France. The French like a display of independence.

Nor has there been any criticism of the determination to use the French navy to keep Greenpeace and its florilla of small boats away from Mururoa atoll, where the tests take place. The big scandal about French agents, who sank the Greenpeace ship Rain-bow Warrior in New Zealand never produced a single question here, about why continued tests are necessary, nor about future nuclear plans. But it is not over yet. There are still, booby traps floating around. The politicians and the press's approach to the affair has its own logic, which, is vulnerable to surprises.

Scarcely anyone in France objected to the operation, which so out-raged New Zealanders, despite clear violation of international norms of friendly territory. Indignation was re-served for the fact that it was conducted in such a clumsy fashion, and that after a transparently awkward cover-up Paris was caught out. Pierre-Messmer, a former prime minister and defense minister, summed up the reaction: "This affair has humiliated? France, and, like all Frenchmen, I hate to see my country humiliated."

Defense Minister Charles Hernor finally resigned, and the secret service chief. Pierre Lacoste, was dismissed in an attempt to put an end to; the story. The press, which had uncharacteristically dug out the embar-rassing revelations of official responsibility, has obliged for the moment. But there are too many loose ends,

And for yet another, the four secret service officers charged with leaking details of the to fester, such situations can lead to operation to the press have said the all-too-familiar crises of mass exthrough their lawyers that they did odus, famine or civil war that become not talk to journalists. They claim that they only talked to superiors because they knew that something was "rotten" in their organization and they had a duty to report. All this is very murky. There have been shadowy charges of plots and sabotage in the secret service that nobody seems to be trying to clear up. Opposition politicians would like to pin responsibility on Mr. Mitterrand and Prime Minister Laurent Fabius, if they can find a way without seeming to be undermining France. The press, as if startled by its own daring has reverted to staid reports of public comments, noting dryly that Mr. Mitterrand says he wants no more to do with the affair.

Of course, it is not his only problem. Apart from polls that show re-lentlessly that his party will do badly in the elections, there is a fight going on among the Socialists over whether to march on adamantly on a losing track or to proclaim a change of platform toward the moderation that they have come to practice.

In the circumstances, it is surprising that there has been no comm about Mr. Mitterrand's health. The constitution gives him two more years in office beyond the parliamen tary elections, but makes no provi sion for how power would be divided with an opposition legislature. There is no precedent, and it poses the central dilemma for France now. The constitution also provides no succes sor. evening. But there is still no doubt that we have at the Albery a remarkably bitchy, waspish, acerbically funny triptych on the nature of homosexuality. When we first meet Arnold, the Rita Hayworth of Coney Island, it is in a series of raunchy monologues about his misadventures in gay bars. By the time "International Stud" gives way to "Fugue in a Nursery," the second play, we have lurched into a domestic quartet faintly reminiscent of Albee's "Virginia Woolf": Arnold, his male lover newly married, the lover's wife and Arnold's new boyfriend regroup into ever-changing bisexual power struggles. We then move on five years, to the moment when Arnold's quintessentially straight mother has to face up to her son's irredeemable need to be a wife and mother himself. This last play is in effect a Neil Simon farce about gays tumbling out of closets, and Miriain Karlin plays it superlatively, but the evening belongs to Anthony Sher, off his "Richard III" sticks and onto altogether different crutches. If I have any reservation about Robert Allen Ackerman's thoughtful production it is only that when, in New York, the author played Arnold, he seemed to be taking part in a lengthy documentary about his life; now we have an actor giving a very strong performance, and that inevitably makes the whole tortured affair a little farther removedfrom its audience than it once was...

Uneasily poised somewhere between a celebration of Judy Gar-land's songs and a clinical report from her psychiatrist, Terry Wale's "Judy" at the Bristol Old Vic is a biomusical in urgent need of more work before it reaches London in December. Despite the recent ca-tastrophes of "Jean Seberg" at the National and "Marilyn" at the Adelphi, superstar disaster stories are potent at the box office; the West End has Elvis Presley and is soon to get John Lennon, or rea-sonable facsimiles thereof.

No single performer of recent times was more constantly mocked by her material than Garland, Having spectacularly failed to be born in a trunk or get happy, she also failed ever to find the end of the rainbow, her private life becoming a series of alcoholic falls into the arms of ever-more-monitable lmsbands. But her songs came from dozens of composers and were only given coherence and greatness by her singing of them, and a show about the corrosive nature of stardom still needs a star. Lesley Mackie in the title role is a tiny, talented actress who looks for much of the evening as if she would have been just as happy playing Mickey Rooney.

Reagan: A Master of Political Compromise and Ideological Purity

By Leslie H. Gelb New York Times Service

ASHINGTON — Ronald Reagan is unique in the history of American presidents. He is alone in possessing the mind of both an ideologue and a politician.

He has all the moral force and power that swell from absolute conviction. His rhetorical lightning bolts about what is good and evil seem to set him apart from the world of waffling politicians. Yet, unlike other true believers who have ascended the national stage, like a Barry M. Goldwater or a William Jennings Bryan, be is a natural horse trader, often compromising his positions to move toward his political ends.

Somehow, this contradictory cast of mind works for Mr. Reagan. In political terms, he has been an extraordinary success. His popularity remains astronomical. For all of his compromises, he still manages to look like a man of unbending principle. He has seen many of his ideas translated into legislation and helped move the national agenda in his direction toward the right, Yet the president's commitment to his principles has led him to take extraordinary, controversial actions, such as running up unprecedented budget deficits and igniting new military competition with the Soviet Union in space. Critics and even members of his own staff question just how deeply he understands the issues in these and other areas. They worry about his frequent carelessness with the facts. How can one understand the mind of Mr.

That was the central question posed in dozens of interviews with President Reagan's past and present aides, and during an hourlong interview with the president himself.

What emerged was a rich, provocative and sometimes contradictory portrait. Not one of the friends and aides interviewed, for example, suggested that the president was, in any conventional sense, analytical, intellectually curious or well-informed, although it would have been easy and natural for them to say so. They clearly did not think it necessary.

Time and again, they painted a picture of a man who had serious intellectual shortcomings but was a political heavyweight, a leader whose instincts and intuition were right more often than their own analyses.

His mind, they said, is shaped almost entirely by his own personal history, not by pondering on history books — he thinks anecdotally, not analytically.

The president's mind, they suggested, turns on two philosophical poles, truth and necessity. To him, truths are simple and he knows them. He may momentarily yield if he feels he has no choice politically, but he almost invariably keeps coming back to his principles. And he is tough-minded and stubborn about it.

THE president knows what he is doing, when to yield and when to fight, and he talked freely about it during an interview in the Oval Office.

At one point, he was asked about criticism of some of the political compromises he has made.

He can be so secretive that his aides could not predict with any confidence what kind of compromises he might make, either at the November summit meeting in Geneva with the Soviet leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, or with congressional leaders on tax reform and trade.

Time after time during his presidency, Mr. Reagan has demonstrated his unrelenting determination to have his way. In the process, he might outrage supporters, employ sophistry, to-tally reverse his position, all the while denying it. Yet he is also capable of making the kind of difficult decisions his recent predecessors in the White House have avoided. It is a different cast

In the interview in the Oval Office, he insisted: "Never would I ever suggest that those other victims were victims in the same sense as the victims of the Holocaust." Yet that was in fact the suggestion he had made, seeking to justify his visit to the German cemetery.

In August, Mr. Reagan declared that the government of South Africa had "eliminated the segregation that we once had in our own country." The statement produced an uproar.

UT the president had made the remark as part of a defense of his firmly held policy at the time, that the best means of influencing Pretoria were to avoid public con-demnation of the government there. And though he somewhat backed off from his words, he was still ambivalent.

At a press conference, the president said he had not intended to say what he did, and he went on: "I did know that all the people that have been coming back here have been reporting to me on how widespread was this, and I'm sorry that I carelessly gave the impression that I believed that it had been totally eliminated. There are areas where it hasn't." Indeed, most

James A. Baker 3d, the Treasury secretary, who served as White House chief of staff in the first term, said, "One of the president's real strengths is his inner compass. He not only believes certain things strongly but has believed them for a long time."

The president's system for getting information is a critical factor in his decisionmaking. According to his aides, he relies primarily on staff memos, which generally are not detailed analyses. The staff also sends him letters that tend to support his beliefs.

He skims the headlines of several daily newspapers, essentially looking for anecdotal material and editorial positions, usually not reading the main news stories. Friends send magazine articles, mainly from conservative journals such as Human Events and Commentary. A recent article in Commentary suggesting that discrimi-nation had been essentially eliminated in South Africa was behind his comment to that effect. his aides said

Members of the president's staff never know just what information he will remember from his reading and how he may use it. "Reagan has. grown up in an intellectual cocoon where he can go from ill-informed articles to reasonably conclusive statements," said a former White House aide who is now elsewhere in the administration.

The former aide added, "Other people would normally ask who wrote the article, what's his reputation, what do others think. Reagan will go with a fact or observation without going through a rigorous process."

Some critics see the president as being simpleminded. Rather, a number of his aides suggest, he is simplistic. That is, he reduces comp tions to simple symbols and images of good and bad, American and un-American. That allows him to cut through the complexities that bewil-der and hold no interest for the general public. putting him squarely on the public's wave-

The president's cast of mind and political technique have given him a major hand in re-shaping the nation's attitudes toward the properrole of government in the economy and the need for greater military spending.

He has also restored the public confidence that was so shaken by the events in the administration of his predecessor. In fact, two aspects of that earlier time — double-digit inflation with high interest rates and the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan - gave Mr. Reagan a running start in his effort to win the country to his beliefs.

Today, though, he faces a new set of problems, with an economy faltering under the weight of budget and trade deficits and the possibility of a new, increasingly expensive and fruitless round of arms competition with Moscow. How will he respond?

If past performance is any indication, the president will not wait until failure overtakes him. If the economy starts to run sharply downhill, he will try the other solutions, perhaps even some of those very measures he has so long derided, such as increased taxes and decreased unlitary spending. He would most likely blame the decisions on everybody else and call them by another name, but he would do it.

If he took such steps, he could count on substantial support from Congress and from some of his key aides. On the issue of arms control, however, a departure from form might run into trouble. A number of his key national security aides, particularly those in the Pentagon, strongly oppose offering major compro-mises to Moscow on arms control. If an agree-ment is what the president wants, and it seems that it is, he would need the cooperation of his whole team, and even then he would face hard bargaining with the Russians.

Mr. Reagan's thinking and technique have been enormously successful at the simpler, negative tasks of hammering away at "big government and rhetorically bashing the Soviet of mind.

After Years of Feeling Eclipsed in U.S., 'Traditional' Women Find Their Voice

By Betty Cuniberti Los Angeles Times Service

ASHINGTON - Vicki Enscoe of Ontario, California, remembers clearly

when she abandoned her feminist prinaples.
"It was 1971, in November," she said. "My bags were packed, I was pregnant, I had my boy in the car and I was on my way to group therapy to tell them I was getting a divorce and an bortion."

Mrs. Enscoe remembers waiting at a red light,
Mrs. Enscoe remembers waiting at a red light, pounding on the steering wheel and feeling "at the end of my rope" when she decided, "I will give my life to God."

She had her baby and salvaged her marriage, discarding what she regarded as feminist princi-

"I started out with women's lib in the first seven years of my marriage. It was a world of grief," she said. "It caused me to be self-centered and constantly dissatisfied unless I was one-up and on top."

For Mrs. Enscoe as well as traditional women who have always disagreed with the feminist movement, frustration has been mounting because they feel their voice is missing from the national debate on "women's issues."

Slowly, these women have begun to organize. Last month. Mrs. Enscoe and 2,000 others attended the second annual convention of the Concerned Women for America, a politically conservative Christian organization that estimates its current base of donors at 150,000.

At a press conference, Beverly LaHaye, president of Concerned Women for America, quoted a Time magazine article putting their membership at 500,000. That figure is larger, she said, "than the National Organization for Women, the League of Women Voters and the National Women's Political Caucus combined."

Eleanor Smeal, president of the National Organization for Women, however, called Mrs. LaHaye's claim to represent the majority of women "an outrage." She cited the feminist stands of NOW and organizations such as the National Education Association, the American Association of University Women, the League of Women Voters, the National Women's Political Caucus, the American Nurses Association, the United Methodist Women and others.

Ms. Smeal, noting that NOW's membership figures are under review, estimated its current membership at 150,000.

RS. LaHaye said Concerned Women's RS. Larraye said control of 1985 budget totaled $2 million. No information was available on its finances in the New York office of charities registration, and the Sacramento Registry of Charitable Trusts said the group is delinquent in filing its 1984 financial report.

In its 1983 report to the California attorney general, the group said it received $200,000 in total direct public support. Its 1983 tax return claimed a net loss of $127,000.

By comparison, a financial statement filed with the New York office of charities registration showed that in 1984, NOW received $3.3 million in membership dues and another $1.9

The group also plans to form its own political action committee to donate money to candidates who support its positions. It is against legalized abortion, for school prayer, against the concept of comparable pay for jobs of comparable worth, against the Civil Rights Act and for the Strategic Defense Initiative, the Reagan ad ministration's plan to develop a space-based efense against nuclear missiles.

In addition, it plans to introduce a parents. rights amendment to the constitution. The amendment, the members say, would give them the right to supervise what their children learn in school, to make all medical decisions for their children (including abortion) without interference from the state, and to use disciplinary action, such as "moderate spanking."

At their three-day convention in Washington the women prayed, sang hymns and viewed an aborted fetus in a coffin. They also heard speeches from two Republican congressmen; Jack F. Kemp of New York and Newt Gingrich of Georgia, and attended workshops on lobbying picketing and facing the media The convention was held a week after Phyllis Schlafly's Eagle Forum, another conservative women's group that lobbies for pro-family is sues, held its convention in Washington.

Word Processors Alter Role For Male, Female Secretaries

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

ARIS - With the introduction of the personal computer, U.S. executives are hiring more men with word-processing skills as secretaries as the secretarial role itself is changing from "office wife" to electronic wizard. Some women secretaries in the United States believe that the presence of men as secretaries will help do away with the old stereotype of the "office wife." Others resent the male encroachment on their territory just as things are getting better. In Europe, the word processor has hardly made a dent in traditional stereotypes and attitudes. Given a man and a woman with word processingskills, executives still prefer to hire women for the secretary's traditional tasks - handling correspondence, preparing reports as well as answering the phone, bringing the coffee and greeting guests at the door.

Most men ... might feel awkward about giving orders to another man."

One caveat to that are certain government and business posts, where the right-hand person of a top civil servant traditionally

"I don't think, in France, the new technology will bring about a change at all," said Sonia Vanular, an Englishwoman living in France. In 1974, whe created the European Association of Professional Secretaries, which promotes the image of the executive secretary as a professional

"This idea of a secretary who is a partner doesn't exist in the French hierarchical business world," she said. "There is a female world and there is a male world. These are two completely different worlds that don't mix." Mrs. Vanular places the blame for such rigidity as much on women as on men.

François Dessaix, who is bilingual, takes short-hand and can type and operate a telex as well as word processor; cannot find a job as a secretary with a French company. His last temporary assignment was with the French subsidiary of a U.S. company. "There was no problem there, as long as you could do the job they didn't care what you were," he said. "But when I go for interviews with French companies they ask me why I have been reduced to looking for a secretary's job?"

Pepsi-Cola (Northern Europe) Ltd. received 70 applications in response to an ad that ran last week in The Times of London for a secretary in the personnel department. Not one was from a man. "It's a prestige thing," said Madeleine Waring, in charge of the company's hiring, "First, most men want a pretty girl. Second, they might feel awkward about giving orders to another man."

OM Anton, executive vice-president of branch operations at Kelly Services Inc., the U.S. temporary-help agency that places 440,000 temporary workers worldwide; said that in the United States, 15 percent of Kelly's temporary office clerical workers are men, compared with six out of 12,000 in Britain and two out of 1.000 in France.

Due to the large growth in office automation in the United States, there has been a 50-percent increase in the employment of male clerical belp in three years," Mr. Anton said.

Manpower Temporary Services, which places 600,000 temporary workers a year worldwide, said that in such large U.S. cities as Boston, New York and Los Angeles, 25 to 40 percent of their office-automation workers and general clerical staff are men, compared with 1 percent in Britain. The U.S. figures include summer jobs for college students.

"In the United States, men are attracted by the extra pay," said:

James Fromstein of Manpower Temporary Services. "If you can operate a personal computer, you can expect to earn 20 percent

Yet according to studies by the Institute of Manpower Studies and International Management, a McGraw Hill publication, the secretarial role in Europe is changing as well. And according to Kelly Girl Services Ltd., employees with word processing-skills

AUSTIN, Minnesota — It was almost a year ago that Ray Rogers, a union organizer, first came to this town, 100 miles south of Minneapolis, and a meatpacking center for nearly a century.

Angered by a 23 percent wage cut, local members of the United Food and Commercial Workers believed they might strike George A. Hormel & Co. in August, when their contract would expire. They called Mr. Rogers,

The move was unlikely to please Mr. Hormel — or Big Labor, in the late 1970s and early 1980s, Mr. Rogers became a hero of near mythic proportions with the union rank and file by helping score an organizing victory over J.P. Most of the union leaders refuse to understand it. They are not ready to make the organizational commitment to carry it off."

The confrontation in Austin is a typical example of the Rogers approach. Starting in January, the labor organizer devoted himself virtually full time to devising strategy and marshaling support for the local union.

With the temperature at 20 de-grees below zero Fahrenheit (minus 29 Centigrade), he sent several dozen workers to distribute leaflets at 12,000 homes in Austin and the rest of Mower County. Mailings went out to every national union in the country, as well as 50,000 local unions.

Members built storage and distribution facilities in the basement of the Austin Labor Temple, where three local unions have offices. When the strike finally began in August, the union was ready to distribute food and clothing to its 1,500 members. With the strike under way, 350

Fiat and Ford Abandon Plan to Merge in Europe

tional Herald Tribune PARIS - Fizi SpA and Ford Motor Co. said Tuesday that they had abandoned plans to merge their automaking operations in Western Europe. The companies said it had become clear after months of discussions that a joint car venture was "not viable."

Had the plan succeeded, it would have created Europe's largest automaker, commanding close to a 25-percent share of the market. Fiat, second only to Volkswagen, has a 12.8-percent share of total West European sales while Ford, No. 3, has an 11.7-percent share.

According to company sources, the plan was abandoned because of the two companies' inability to iron out the problems of integrating two diverse management, production and marketing systems

But the major sticking point, one source said, was Fiat's insistence that it be the senior, or managing, partner of the venture.

"There were financial and fiscal obstacles stemming from the lack of a truly European common market, but the key issue that could not be resolved was who should be in charge," a source close to the negotiations said on the condition that he not be identified.

The source and industry analysts said that Fiat had insisted on leadership and maintaining its "managerial autonomy," but that Ford had insisted recently that it be in charge of the merged company.

Despite rumors in the past week that the proposed venture was foundering, the announcement Tuesday generally came as a sur-prise. Senior Fiat officials had said several times in recent weeks that they expected to announce some kind of merger agreement before the end of the year.

During a meeting in Paris on Sept. 26, which company sources said was a last-ditch effort to find a solution, Ford and Flat negotiators could not resolve complex legal and financial questions related to integrating Ford and Fiat manufacturing plants in Italy, West Germany, Britain, France and Spain.

They also were unable to resolve how to assign top managerial responsibilities for the proposed empany, the sources said.

"Integration was very difficult to achieve, if not impossible," said a Fiat spokesman in Turin. He added that "the two cultures - American and European - proved to be rather different" as the talks progressed, and that the obstacles also involved tax issues related to evaluating Ford and Fiat assets in Western Europe. billion, are now expected to be $4 A Ford Europe spokesman in months ago. Washington Post Service WARSAW - Poland and the Soviet Union bave signed a five-year economic agreement calling for more dependence by Poland on Soviet trade and investments as it seeks to revitalize its ailing economy.

Under the protocol, concluded Monday after several months of talks, Moscow's share of total Polish trade is due to rise to 40 percent by 1990 from the current level of 37 percent. ## Forbes. The most efficient way of reaching America's most influential executives.

A glance at the graph will tell you what a study by a leading independent researcher, Market Facts, Inc., told us: That Forbes is preferred reading by more corporate officers in . 1,000 of America's largest service and industrial companies. In comparison with Fortune and Business Week, Forbes was judged to be overall favorite by 44%, versus 29% for Business Week and 19% for Fortune.

When regular readers were asked which of the three reflects best the excitement of business, Forbes had twice the scores of the other two. And when asked which of the three stands for "free enterprise," 71% named Forbes, compared with 13% for Fortune and 7% for Business Week.

These results confirm surveys done over the past fifteen years showing that more officers in big business read Forbes regularly than either Fortune or Business Week. As the graphs so eloquently show, Forbes is the most cost-effective business magazine for reaching America's most effective executives. If you want to reach this elite, not only is it good business for you to put your advertising in Forbes, it's bound to be good for your business.

The attractions of Zero Coupon Bonds are obvious

Zero Coupon Bonds are relatively new investments which offer exceptional growth potential and a high degree of security.

Issued by corporations, governments and municipalities, Zero Coupon Bonds sell for a fraction of their face value - perhaps as little as 10%. In other words, a $100,000 Zero Coupon due to mature in 20 years could be purchased for only $10,000.

CP Air, Nordair Reach Agreement to Merge

United Press International
MONTREAL — CP Air and Nordair agreed
Tuesday to swap shares in a merger agreement that gives Canada another major airline serving

The proposed merger calls for Nordair to exchange 2.5 million common shares outstanding for CP Air preferred shares with a value of 43 million Canadian dollars ($31.5 million), or Nordair employs 1.300 people and has extensive routes in Quebec and Ontario. It also serves Alberta and some U.S. states, such as Florida. CP Air, with 7,200 employees, serves five continents and all major cities in Canada.

CP Air earlier this year bought out Eastern Provincial Airways, which serves the Maritime provinces and Newfoundland.

THE SECRETS OF HARRY BRIGHT

By Joseph Wambaugh. 345 pages, $17.95. Perigord Press, William Morrow, 105 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10016.

Reviewed by Dennis Drabelle

J OSEPH WAMBAUGH'S novels about po-lice life — "The Choirboys," "The Delta Star," "The Glitter Dome" — sell like hot Hill Street cakes. Wambaugh's appeal rests in part on an insider's perspective: He used to be a on an insider's perspective. He used to be a detective with the Los Angeles Police Department. What this means is that legions of reading Americans probably believe the average cop is a buffoon behind a badge.

Such, at least, is the impression left by "The Secrets of Harry Bright," a schizoid novel whose plot veers from farcical episodes involving Keystone Kops with indefatigable libidos to dark interludes of fathers mourning dead sons.

Consider O. A. Jones, policeman and sole witness to the aftermath of the novel's central mystery. Before learning how he got lost in the desert and stumbled upon a wrecked car con-taining the burned corpse of a young man, the reader must digest several pages on Jones's incompetence in his previous stint as a patrolman in Palm Springs, California.

Jones's greatest lapse was to join in a car chase when he should have been driving a handcuffed suspect to headquarters. He crashed into the chased car, bending his police car in half and killing the suspect. This is all amusing enough but has little bearing on the dead boy, Jack Watson, or his father, the multimillionaire Victor Watson, obsessed with finding out how and why his son died.

Wambaugh seems to be an energetic re-searcher. Not content with his ex-cop's savvy, he acknowledges in a preface that he had help from several California police departments in producing the book's "wonderful cop talk." Wonderful it is. Shot suspects have been "venwithdratin is sink suspects have been verifiated," "You got that right" is the catch phrase of the day; Blackpool's frightened partner confesses, "My neck hair's doing the boogaloo and the freak a deek."

This sort of mixing - the lewd and ludicrons with the passionate and tragic - requires the skills of a Joseph Heller if it is to succeed. These Wambangh lacks. He can write in a seriousness when he chooses to: his "The Onion Field" is one of the few true-crime stories that can hold its own with Truman Capote's "In Cold Blood." But here, he has written not a tragicomedy but a tragedy with a supporting case of giggling schoolboys.

Dennis Drabelle, a Washington attorney and journalist, wrote this review for The Washington

Playoffs, Series the Final Rides On Baseball '85 Roller Coaster

لمِلَدًا مِن النَّصِلُ

By Thomas Boswell Vashington Post Service

WASHINGTON - If 1984 was the baseball season when nothing memorable happened, then 1985 will be remembered as the year when everything, both wonderful and lousy, transpired at once.

If the meatiest chunk of the season, the playoffs and World Series, lives up to its prologue, the next three weeks should be baseball nir-

How fitting that the regular season should end with Phil Niekro not only winning his 300th game but, at 46, becoming the oldest man in history to pitch a shutout. If Tom Seaver could win his 300th game on the same day that Rod Carew got his 3,000th hit, why shouldn't Niekro tie a ribbon around the whole old-folks celebration on the final day?

Above all, this season will be remembered as the year when 44-year-old Pete Rose finally passed Ty Cobb in career hits. That acaplishment will endure, but it is probable that the season's two most overblown stories will prove to be The Strike and The Scandal. After six months of fretting, baseball's big strike lasted one day. Both sides raced back to the bargaining table to see which could say I surrender" the fastest. And in time, baseball's Pittsburgh Seven cocaine trial may seem a far smaller topic than it does at present. Both professional football and basket-ball have been through similar drug scares in the '80s, and neither suffered significantly.

Perhaps it's just baseball's traditional knack for dumb luck in the clutch, but this has been a season that would take almost any fan's mind off courtroom transcripts. Never have three division races been undecided on the final Saturday of the season.

Seldom has baseball had more amazing individual performances in one season than it had this year.

Dwight Gooden's 24-4 record must play second fiddle to his 1.53 earned-run average, the secondlowest figure since 1920. Wade Boggs finished with 240 hits, a .368 average and a growing reputation as the greatest pure hit-ter since Ted Williams. With 145 runs batted in, Don

Mattingly has emerged as a Yankee of mythical pin-stripe potential. George Brett of the Kansas City

Royals received an all-time record number of intentional walks, yet still finished with 112 RBIs. He had the league's second-worst offense around him and hit 30 homers in a huge stadnim.

The game dazzled us with youngsters such as Vince Coleman, who stole 110 bases; Tom Browning, the first rookie to win 20 games in more than 30 years, and Bret Saberhagen, 21, who has established him-self as one of the top pitchers in the 22 20 10 3 228

And now the sport's showcase days begin.

Those who longed for a subway Series with Yankees and Mets, or a freeway Series with Dodgers and Angels may be in mourning. But no one else should be.

Any statistical analysis comes to Blue Jays were, top to bottom, the game's strongest teams. fense and speed.
On the other hand, the Kansas City Royals can't hit a lick and the Los Angeles Dodgers finished near the middle of the offensive pack in the weak-hitting National League. Neither team is noted for betterthan-average defense.

But before you waste a week's pay, look at how these teams fared against each other this year: The Dodgers and Royals each won the season series, 7-5.

The easier pick is the American League. True, the Royals have two superb starters in Charlie Leibrandt and Saberhagen (Leibrandt, 17-9, was to oppose Dave Stieb, 14-13, in Tuesday night's opener). Dan Quisenberry is the reliever of the 80s and Brett is an inspiration to mankind. Meanwhile, the Blue Jays' biggest name pitcher, Dave Stieb, has a habit of blowing his cool in big games.

Despite all that, the Blue Jays are simply a better team. With the playoffs expanded to seven games, the stronger total team will win:

Toronto in six.
The National League is messier. The Cards are a seriously underrated team. And their three main starters — Tudor, Joaquin Andujar strengths - pitching, hitting, de- tories. But Andujar has been a weak link lately. And how much pressure can Tudor stand? Also, does anybody, including Whitey Herzog, have confidence in his makeshift who-are-they bullpen?

By contrast, the Dodgers open with Fernando Valenzuela (17-10) Wednesday against Tudor; Valenzuela, who seems inspired by great occasions, will be followed by Hershiser and Bob Welch. All three have ERAs under 2.50. Put both Rick Honeycutt and Jerry Reuss in an already adequate bullpen, and you wonder how St. Louis will score. The plethora of Dodger lefthanders also puts a crimp in the Cardinal running game.

Los Angeles has the home-field advantage and the pitching mat-chups. But the Cardinals have a cohesive, interlocking team that plays together as a unit better than any in the game.

Pitching beats good hitting in the playoffs — if it's power hitting. That's why the Cards will hold down the Dodgers. St. Louis can score with its speed. Take the Cardinals in seven games.

Woodard also captained the gold medal-winning U.S. squad at the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles.

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP)—A special panel of the International Olympic Committee, noting an "increasing incidence of doping," called Tuesday for measures to cope with the problem, including lifetime

Olympic bans for violators.

The IOC Athletes Commission said doping remains a "significant problem that blemishes the Olympic Movement." In addition to banning all "intentional" violators, it suggested that world and Olympic records be recognized only in conjunction with doping control.

Programs for athletes, coaches and officials on the dangers of banned drugs and the inclusion of anti-doping clauses in sponsorship contracts were among other measures proposed.

Box Office Smash LXVII

By Russell Baker NEW YORK — "Casablanca II" would have been great. Now of course we know Hollywood should have cashed in big by producing "Casablanca II" in 1944. I tried to tell them, but they didn't know what I was talking about because in those days nobody in Hollywood had heard of Roman numerals.

"You are saying we can cash in on a big hit by thewing the cud a second time and adding those Roman funerals to the title?"

This question was asked me by the great Stuart D. O. Mogul, the man immortalized as the fictional Stu Dio Mogul in F. Scott Fizzapa's epic novel of Hollywood, "The Last Mogul."

The real Mogul had a closed mind. "Ever since 'Imitation of Life, everybody wants to do a fu-neral movie" Mogul told me, "and funeral movies are death at the box office. You want to do Romans? Fine — do gladiators, do emperors eating grapes, do soldiers clanking around like tin cans, but no Roman funerals. Now scram."

Before he could throw me out I handed him the script for "Casablanca II," and after one of his readers read it, he phoned me. You are talking about a sequel," he said, "but there is no way to make a sequel out of 'Casablanca.' The title problem cannot be

In those days, sequels usually had titles composed of words like "son" or "bride" plus the title of the original movie.

Titles like "The Son of Frankenstein" or "The Bride of Andy Hardy" seemed so natural that such sequels became irresistible, where-as "The Son of Casablanca" or The Bride of Casablanca," as Mogul pointed out, were "utterly resistible."

With that he had somebody hang up on me. I sent the script to Bogart, Greenstreet, Bergman, Lorre. I foresaw a future in which great box-office hits would be remade eternally until you could scarcely tell one remake from the other without a scorecard listing the Ro-

If Hollywood had listened, audiences in this 1985 day and age would even now be lined up to see Shirley Temple in "Little Miss Marker XXXVIII."

In "Casablanca II" Bogart was to be running a saloon and gambling joint in Pamplona, Spain, called Rick's Other Place. Because he is greatly respected, as well as the star of the film, he comes into possession of two priceless seats for the bullfights

I hese have been stolen from the body of a murdered Nazi courier, and the reason they are priceless; their location. They afford a straight sightline into the hotel room of Victor Laszlo, the hero of the entire European underground Anyone with tickets for those seats can, by smuggling a high-powered rifle into the bullfight, kill the leader of the underground.

Naturally, Bogart is tempted to give them to the murderous Peter Lorre because he, Bogie, still has a thing about Mrs. Laszlo. Then, as he is about to pass the tickets, who should walk into Rick's Other Place than Sophia Loren!

Rick immediately closes the joint down, gets drumk and makes his faithful piano player, despite stren-uous objections, play "Arrivederci

Of all the gin joints in all the towns in all the world, Rogie mum-bles, it is ironic that Sophia has picked his to wander into. We see why in a flashback: Having given up Ingrid months ago and walked into the fog with Claude Rains, Bogie had found his way into Rome by posing as a Mussolini sympathizer from the Algerian wine trade when Sophia's car collided with his outside Augustus's Tomb and -

Well, you can see where we were headed. For big, big box office, am I not right, Roman-numeral fans? We never got there. The moguls were blind to the future. Also, Sophia Loren had not yet been dis-covered by Hollywood. "But she will be in a couple of years," I told Bogie.

"While we're waiting," he said,
"why don't we go ahead and make Casablanca III?"

"A great idea," I cried. But it turned out he was joking. Too bad. We'd be up to "Casablanca LXVII" by this time and wouldn't need "Rocky IV."

Bernard Loomis's Life of Play

Toy Executive Ponders Toys, Games, Research and Profit

By Sarah Booth Conroy

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — Every day is Christmas for Bernard Loomis, whose work is play.
"When I was growing up — as not the most affluent kid on the block — my favorite toy was a Lionel electric-train catalog." said Loomis, who looks a little like Santa Claus without the beard and red suit.

"Though my rolling stock was only the pictures in the catalog, I ran the biggest railroad of any-body, in my head. Five years ago, I spoke at a conference of Lione people, and they gave me a whole real system. But you know, I had more fun running trains in my

The toy executive was in Washington to promote his new game, Stage II, for Milton Bradley. As an adult, Loomis has made a game of life, enjoying the toys he missed as a child. He has brought children Care Bears and Hot Wheels. They have brought him a bagful of profit.

He bought the rights for "Star Wars" toys before the movie pre-miered. When the movie spun into orbit before the toys were ready, he issued Darth Vader rain checks.

He coordinated the triplet birth of Strawberry Shortcake as a doll, an American Greetings card and a television special.

Loomis is blamed for originating the idea of producing television specials that promote toys as much as they entertain. In the old days, first came the movie or the book or the television program, followed by the toy. Today, it happens simultaneously. "Toy stores sell television-advertised toys as loss leaders, at or below the wholesale price. But you must have product satisfaction."

As an example of a how a toy can be scuttled. Loomis brings up "Baby Alive," a doll that could be fed a formula and then would need its diaper changed. Allied with those who found the idea repulsive on aesthetic grounds were groups concerned about bacteria in the diapers.

Loomis defended the doll with research, "which showed children had more bacteria on their hands

"I had more fun running trains in my imagination."

than the formula." But, he said, "We were dealing more with perception than reality

As for toy guns, Loomis said, They cause an emotional reaction. When I was at Mattel, I kept them from advertising guns. There was a time when guns were part of the John Wayne western syndrome, but guns seemed more fun when we were further away from the reality of war.

"Since television brought Vietnam to the dinner table, playing with guns has become less and less acceptable. Too much reality can ruin play. Who wants a hijacking game?"

Loomis is not one who believes that television and toys are cor-rupting childhood. "Consistently, evil is vanquished by good. We'd have a great world if real evil took the beating it gets on Saturday morning" television programs. He called his current company

GLAD because "I used to be MAD [Marketing and Design, for General Mills], but not anymore." He is president of Great Licensing and Design, a joint venture with Hasbro Bradley Inc., the progenitor of the Transformer figures of last Christmas. Before that, he was president of General Mills MAD, vice president of Mattel Toys and chief executive officer of Kenner Products Co. Loomis is a past president of the Toy Manufacturers of America. He once said he left General Mills because "they were into market research; I'm into guts. We didn't decide to promote those toys on the basis of socalled sophisticated market research. Coca Cola spent four years testing their new Coke, and look what happened. Their intelligent recovery was made with

The trouble with research is that it tells you what people were thinking about yesterday, not to-morrow. It's like driving a car using a rear-view mirror."

Toys in the United States are serious business. "By the end of this year, Hasbro, currently the tops, will do a billion dollars of business," Loomis said. "Mattel, the second-largest toy company, maybe will hit a billion as well."

Time was, said Loomis, "when rich-kid toys came from Germa-ny and cheap toys from Japan. But not any more. Toys are a worldwide product — Hong Kong Taiwan, all over. What re-mains constant is that most toys originate in the United States. The American marketplace has incredible purchasing power. We're the only market big enough to develop toys."

Most board games, essentially a publishing business, are made in the United States, Britain and Australia. Loomis denied that his newest board game, Stage II, was the daughter of Trivial Pursuit. "It's really descended from The New York Times crossword puzzie," he said, "though we and the children often played Trivial Pur-suit without a board. I came up with the idea of questions with a theme, connecting in different ways. Stage II is a whole new game, Trivial Pursuit is informa-

Stage II is deduction."

Stage II has 7,200 questions, "of which I've played with 25 percent," Loomis said. "Each question has to be carefully re-

Loomis is not one to underestimate the intelligence of his cus-tomers, "I don't believe in talking down to people, even children, but instead in playing up to them. If you make a game interesting enough, people are willing to mm off the tube and enjoy each other in a mild intellectual pursuit." Loomis points out that the best toys stick around a long time. "Barbie Doll is now 25 years old. Potato Head, the Mickey Mouse Telephone, Life and Monopoly games go on and on."

For Christmas 1985, Loomis expects to see more of the same, but he is expecting great things to come in future years.

"We're in the midst of a communications explosion. A computer network is already doing Stage IL The toy of the day is the videocassette recorder. It's a dramatic step forward. We already have projects for VCR games."
Exactly what, he's not saying.
